

Editorial

The editors of FULL are pleased to welcome you to the third volume of FULL. Our journal is meant to provide a platform for linguistic research on modern and older Finno-Ugric or other Uralic languages and dialects, comparative research as well as research on single languages, with comparison of just Finno-Ugric languages or comparison across family lines, with formally or empirically oriented papers.

The present issue contains two papers: One is on quotative inversion in Hungarian. It is modestly titled 'A note on Quotative Inversion in Hungarian', but is actually a highly detailed study of quotative inversion in Hungarian viewed in a comparative perspective. The other paper is titled 'Syntax in the 21th century, Reflections on The Bloomsbury Companion to Syntax'. It is a review article (the first such article published by FULL) but as the title suggests, it is more than a review, containing a set of reflections on the state of syntactic research. A note and some reflections: We think that you will find them very interesting.

We wish to thank all the anonymous reviewers who generously lent their time and expertise to make sure that each submission is carefully vetted and fairly assessed. Their constructive criticism ensures the consistently high quality of our contributions.

Our papers can be freely accessed and downloaded without any need for prior registration. At the same time, those who register, or have already registered, are provided with the benefit of getting notified of new issues, calls, etc. via the occasional email. FULL welcomes manuscripts from all the main branches of linguistics, including phonology, morphology, syntax, semantics and pragmatics, employing a diachronic or synchronic perspective, as well as from first language acquisition and psycholinguistics. Whatever the theoretical or empirical orientation of the contributions may be, our leading principle is to maintain the highest international standards.
